

- "Mother, Mother," we'd call, worried about her safe return as she frolicked in the foaming surf.

July 25, 1933 - Dollar Steamship Lines, Orient and round the world, on board

Well, I arrive in Tokyo today after a swell vacation Everyone was so nice to me in Chefoo and invited Allan and I everywhere I played tennis and swam every day. I came back by way of Shanghai to get a look at to place but it looks too much like Buenos Aires to be interesting This is a wonderful ship

Mother showed us the wonder of rain "Please, please, may we go out, Mother, and play in the ram today?" we'd chant Bathing suits on, we'd dance out to splash puddles, count worms, toss our heads back and with open mouths, drink falling droplets

Mother didn't drive Instead, she introduced us to the delight of public transportation Travelling to the bustle of downtown via the gentle rocking motion of the streetcar or burrowing in the comforting roar and hiss of the bus made our excursions memorable

November 23, 1929, Buenos Aires - I just came back from a weeks vacation As we went by auto we didn't have to pay a cent for transportation and we traveled all together 1250 miles Some trip We traveled about 8 hours every day and didn't stay in the same hotel twice in order to keep within our schedule. And what roads! All full of six feet ruts and water up to your neck. We had to go across corn fields in order to avoid the big holes in the roads, but it was all very interesting and we sure got a good idea of real Argentine country. Cordoba is the place where the only hills in the whole Republic are and they call them mountains but really they are no bigger than the hills around Ware Although the coathañger was threatened, Mother's discipline was rarely physical She got her message across by emphasizing a desired command with the repeated tapping of pointed fingers into the other palm Her blue eyes altered to steel-gray and her countenance took on a "nothing-will-change-my-mind" look "A job worth doing is worth doing well," she would quote as we remade a bed "That's
